"North Country" is a collection of stories about northern New York, its Adirondack Mountains and its people. A Mohawk Coyote starts off the story telling as a way of indicating the mix of fact and fiction that follows. A logging family searches for a more settled way of life while playing out its history with romance, hard work, violent death and a runaway boy and his dog. A Tug Hill Cousin survives the battle of Bull Run. There is a haunted hotel, canoe trips on The Stillwater, Indian and Long Lakes, the Beaver and Black Rivers. There are stories by Aunt Bessie who lived on the job in the woods as a little girl. The book's cover is a photo of a wood carving made by the old man who had been the runaway boy. It is his lumberjack dad, Tom Beahan, riding a log down river as he balances with a peavey. Lumberjack Tom is the Grampa of Larry Beahan's first book, "My Grampa's Woods, the Adirondacks."
